OVERVIEW

The Aboriginal Energy Challenge is a Forum that provides timely information on the most recent developments in the energy, economic development and legal sectors that are engaging aboriginal participation in energy and economic development projects.

The program will focus on the topics like the First Nations participation in energy projects including the success cases, the economic case for connecting to remote communities, capacity building and jobs creation in the Aboriginal Communities, training and skills development for Aboriginal peoples, project financing opportunities, how to get a deal done with Aboriginal communities and how to get a project through the regulatory process with a minimum of litigation and regulatory risk.

This program is ideally suited towards senior execs from utilities and energy companies, Federal, Provincial and Municipal government officials, Chiefs, band council members and community leaders, consultants, lawyers and policy makers. The event will serve as a valuable communication forum for addressing the many issues that all the parties and stakeholders are trying to come together on.

CONFERENCE HIGHLIGHTS

• Types of Aboriginal energy projects: past experience, current and future projects in power generation, distribution and transmission
• Evolution and results of incentives and programs to encourage Indigenous involvement and ownership in the renewable energy sector
• Regional electricity planning and identifying future opportunities
• Bringing a project to market – challenges and opportunities of Aboriginal engagement and inclusion
• Business relationships required to get things going
• Relationship building: empowerment and energy development, education and capacity building
• Economic case for investment in high quality infrastructure and financing Aboriginal energy development
• The rationale for action now - why energy over other priorities?
• Removing the crutch of fossil-based energy supply
• Meeting the challenge of delivering sustainable energy solutions in harsh, remote environments
• DAY 2 Afternoon Workshop - How to Consult and How to be Consulted
• …and much more

LEARNING OUTCOMES

• Review types of Aboriginal energy projects
• Discuss incentives and programs to encourage Indigenous involvement and ownership in the renewable energy sector
• Review electricity planning and identify future opportunities
• Assess the challenges and opportunities of Aboriginal engagement and inclusion
• Build an economic case for investment in high quality infrastructure and financing Aboriginal energy development
• Identify the challenges of delivering sustainable energy solutions in harsh, remote environments
AGENDA

Post-Conference Workshop:
How to Consult and How to be Consulted

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2016

1:15 – 1:45 pm  Registration
1:45 – 5:15 pm  Workshop Timing

OVERVIEW:

Aboriginal Consultation is both a constitutionally protected requirement where government decisions or approvals are required that affect Aboriginal or Treaty Rights and also a “buzz word” that gets used and quoted more and more frequently in the popular media. The critical question for those involved in energy development, however, is what does it mean and what are the implications that it has for energy projects across Canada. This workshop will attempt to answer that question using real life examples of successful consultation processes along with lessons learned in those processes. Workshop attendees will be encouraged to raise issues for discussion and to compare experiences, thoughts and approaches to the issues.

LEARNING OUTCOMES:

• Review what Aboriginal Consultation means and what are the implications that it has for energy projects across Canada
• Gain practical advice regarding how to consult and how to be consulted
• Identify hurdles and risks that can negatively impact accord between communities and industry
• Discuss what can the Aboriginal and Métis communities, government and industry learn from real life examples of successful consultation processes along with lessons learned in those processes

AGENDA

Practical Advice regarding the Duty to Consult – how to consult and how to be consulted
• Consultation vs. social license
• Consultation as the “foot in the door”
• Social license as the sustaining goal of engagement
• What can we learn from Duty to Consult cases
• Examples of successful consultation and lessons learned

How to Build Relationships
• In government
• The private sector
• Among Indigenous organizations and remote communities

Aboriginal Consultation in the Context of the Changing Energy Regulatory Framework
• Managing competing Aboriginal, environment and industry demands
THURSDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2016 (WORKSHOP CONTINUED)

Métis Rights and Consultation
- Discussion of this quickly evolving area
- Building accord between Métis communities and industry

What Can We Learn from Each Other:
An open and frank discussion summarizing the workshop. Attendees will be encouraged to raise issues for discussion and to compare experiences, thoughts and approaches to the issues.

Workshop Instructors:

Adam Chamberlain
Partner, Borden Ladner Gervais LLP

Adam Chamberlain is National Leader of the Team North, Aboriginal Law and Climate Change Groups and Toronto Regional Leader of the Forestry Law Group. Certified as a Specialist in Environmental Law by the Law Society of Upper Canada, Adam has practiced environmental and energy law for most of his career, focused on infrastructure development. Adam’s practice encompasses diverse matters related to the environmental and other regulatory requirements involved with project development. Adam is also extensively involved in relationships between Aboriginal communities and project proponents related to all manner of developments.

Merv McLeod
Partner, McLeod Wood Associates

Merv McLeod considers his job to be that of a cultural translator. Well versed in public policy and government channels, from his formal education and extensive work experience with the Nishnawbe-Aski Nation and the Ministry of Northern Development and Mines, and for the last 15 years, McLeod Wood Associates Inc. Merv has focused his efforts on building the paths that create economic sustainability and opportunities for clients. As complicated as cultural barriers may seem, Merv strives to make the solutions seamless and well understood by all parties included in the process at hand. Merv has built a solid network of contacts. He knows how to find the resources, how to navigate the system and how to make the connections to achieve the desired end result. Merv has found a balance between the First Nations world and the Canadian mainstream with an ease and understanding of what needs to be done and how to make it happen. That makes him a force of positive change.
INSTRUCTIONAL METHODS

Case studies, PowerPoint presentations, and group discussion will be used at this event.

REQUIREMENTS FOR SUCCESSFUL COMPLETION
